

Shape Federal Policy Before It's Final

Public comments put your voice into the official record and can influence how federal rules are changed, justified, or finalized. Substantive comments must be addressed by law, can serve as the basis for future legal cases and make public dissenting voices. Public comments are most effective when they are specific: identify the provision you oppose, explain the real-world impact, and suggest an alternative. Make it as personal as you can. Use AI to:

- Find federal or state proposals currently open for public comment.
- Summarize a proposed rule in plain English.
- Identify exactly what sections of the proposal would change.
- Ask, “How could this affect me, my community, or my profession?”

Step 1: Find & select an issue to comment on.

1. Go to <https://www.herks.net/>. It lists federal rules that are open for comments now.
2. Select an issue that you find interesting.

Step 2: Understand the issue deeper, including who benefits and what the motivation is behind the regulation change.

1. Ask the AI:
 - a. Explain this regulation change to me in simple terms
 - b. Who benefits from this?
 - c. What is their motivation for sponsoring this change?
 - d. How does this fit in with the administration's political agenda?

Step 3: Write and submit your comment.

1. Ask the AI to help you write your comments. Include:
 - a. make it specific and personal (share only what you're willing to make public)
 - b. the provision number
 - c. describe the impact of the change
 - d. the action you want them to take
2. Ask the AI where to submit it.

Step 4: Discuss

1. What are the key take-aways?
2. Was using the AI helpful?